Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: On p.4 of Remarks, Applicant argued that Chandrammenon et al. do not teach establishing a connection of the mobile router to another home agent that does not have the capability to accommodate the mobile router when the mobile router changes operations from those of a mobile router function to those of a mobile terminal function. In response, Chandrammenon et al. indeed teach establishing a connection of the mobile router to another home agent that does not have the capability to accommodate the mobile router when the mobile router changes operations from those of a mobile router function to those of a mobile terminal function (p.7, [0109]). In particular, Chandrammenon teaches establishing a connection to a home agent by the user directly with an address. The user can establish a connection to a home agent that does not have the capability to accommodate a mobile router when it changes to a mobile terminal function.
